Bronze

This bronze sculpture presents a striking fusion of cultural memory and speculative future. With the body of a robot and a head shaped in the style of traditional African carving, it feels both ancient and futuristic-like a guardian from a forgotten legend or a myth yet to be written.

Its weathered surface and monumental stance suggest that it has survived through time, not just as a machine, but as a symbol perhaps of protection, power, or forgotten knowledge. The work invites viewers to imagine a world where technology and tradition are not separate, but deeply connected.

Is this figure a relic from the past we never knew? Or a being from the future we haven't yet reached? In this sculpture, mythology and machinery merge to raise a timeless question: what truths lie hidden in the stories we haven't yet discovered?
